CONTEXT

The Lao People's Democratic Republic (Lao PDR) has experienced rapid economic growth in recent decades, driven by hydropower, mining and tourism. Though national poverty has declined steadily, almost one in five Laotians still live below the poverty line. While agriculture is the mainstay of the economy in Laos, about half of households are subsistence farmers using traditional farming methods. Coffee is one of the country's top agricultural crops with high export value and Laos is the third largest coffee producer in Southeast Asia. However, most coffee farmers are small producers and face challenges, such as lack of skills, low productivity and low capacity for commercialisation.

It is the only internationally certified institution in fair-trade and organic coffee production in Laos and it has been a partner of Alterfin since 2009.
